Watch this informative video and YOU can do it. But, if you’re not quite ready to take the leap on your own, find someone born in the 80’s and they can help you get connected.

Some things to know

Jason chose the HDMI cable connection because it is the absolute best way to connect your HDTV (High Definition Television) to your computer with the best picture and sound quality. He will outline other options and shows you how to put it all together right down to the settings on your television.

Just about any computer purchased in the last several years is capable of connecting to your TV. Of course, slow internet connections or outdated video cards may not give you the best results. ALL flat screen TVs are capable of being computer monitors. Unfortunately, this will not work with an “old school” television.

DO NOT WASTE YOUR MONEY ON EXPENSIVE HDMI CABLES! The cheap cables are EXACTLY as good as the expensive ones. (Members of TQS can vouch for this.)
